

About the Owner:

I'm proud to be following in the footsteps of my dad, who worked in the newspaper business and with a University press, and my grandpa, who was also a newspaperman. After my first book was published by a small press, I was intrigued by typography, formatting and the business of publishing and decided to investigate the possibility of opening my own small press. Given the technology that is available, I decided the time was now.

I published a couple of my own titles, and jumped at the opportunity to publish a memoir written by one of my critique members. With the experience I've gained formatting, creating covers and marketing these books, I am ready to expand the business. My mission is to publish up-and-coming writers from the Midwest, to give new authors a chance to be published.

SNAKES IN THE KITCHEN

By Carolyn Paul Branch

We were "river rats" - that's what they called us. We lived in the bottoms, close to the railroad tracks and the Missouri River.

Snakes in the Kitchen is an early childhood memoir of growing up poor in the early 1950's, in Mokane Missouri. It's a story of one woman's efforts, against all odds, to pull her children out of the mud and into a house with indoor plumbing.
